

Sue Bryen

Professional Learning Leader

Sue began her career in education in the United Kingdom, teaching in two large schools prior to moving to Australia in 1999. Sue has extensive experience as a teacher, instructional leader and principal.

Since joining Corwin Australia in 2016, Sue has supported teachers and leadership teams throughout Australia in learning and implementing Visible Learning theory into contextually appropriate practice. She is working with schools and system leaders to develop a school wide culture of learning and progress, and to evaluate their impact. She has also presented internationally at conferences on the topic of collective teacher efficacy, and developing student and teacher agency.

Sue is passionate about empowering others through education. Recognising the complexity of schools and their unique contexts, she continually develops learner agency and lifelong learning capabilities through professional collaboration and evidence informed decisions. Sue continually learns and partners with international researchers and educators to ensure equity and excellence in education for all learners.
